WHAT IS A COMMUNITY OF CARE?

It is a group of people within a territory who have developed enough sensitivity and spirituality to embrace a logic of care for all the goods of nature, with a view of living together with respect and dignity.

THE CAMPAIGN AIMS TO:

Create some form of organised activity where groups of people, who have a calling to promote the care of creation, can look at their territory and neighbours as a community that is open to create processes where the goods of nature are protected in the spirit of integral ecology.

Strengthen processes where some form of organised activity already exists, with a full or partial calling to promote integral ecology. Such processes are integrated in a logic of networks that, in turn, foster other processes by either sharing experiences and actions or accompanying them on their journey.
When in a community of care, people:

- Protect what is still protected and restore what has already been damaged.
- Go through a process of personal conversion that allows them to recognise that the practice of ecology is in line with their faith.
- Recoginses the need to integrate themselves as a community to influence the improvement of their territory, whilst retaining a Christian and civic outlook as well as a spirituality centred on the common good.
- Take on a commitment to reorganise their ways of consumption and interaction with nature, with others and themselves, while at all times being in deep dialogue with God.
- Do not keep an inward-looking perspective but are able to look at the different ways in which our common home is hurt, including through different forms of poverty.
